The republican faith— that such employes would be inspired to give the view in one or both directions is shut off, but it is not required at many and under appointment by a president whom they clared that it would require an expenditure of $12,000,000 alone in new bridges

For the most part those who use crossings are careful, but there are those who through carelessness, or tecoming bar-dened to danger by frequent negotiation fice. It must be remembered that the fice. It must be remembered that the Wilson executive order pincing those offi-cials under civil service examination did regulation. And that one item doesn's much the same as the fellow who goes cale under civil service examination did make any provision for the damage that to sleep on a railroad track. It is not not go into force until the offices were might be done to reads that were not surprising therefore that the idea of climinating all crossings because of those not to be disturbed except for good cause.

> Postmasters are appointed for four years-and nothing in the Wilson order keeps them in office beyond that time. No mere executive order can change the term of service—that can be done by con-gress alone—and thus far congress has taken no steps towards that end. All a president can do even under the Wilson order, is to reappoint the same man, if he wishes him to continue in the service. And then the senate may or may not confirm the nominee, as it pleases. So the so-called "sweeping reform" regard-ing postmasters was but a fiash in the pan after all, and can be done away with by the say-so of Mr. Harding.
